Raymond Arner of Millville received the following letter from his friend, Archie Holland, of Canfield, Ga. "Thinking it may be of interest to many Dispatch readers he has kindly consented to have it published."

Camp Gordon, Ga., Feb. 6, 1918.

Dear Friend Raymond:—You asked me concerning the army companies and divisions here at camp. It is a long story but here goes: Near the beginning of the war most of the camps were divisional camps. Army divisions were formed including infantry companies, signal corps, ambulance companies, medical supply companies and other auxiliaries. The first contingents had much other work to do besides drill and much to endure as camps were not always completely equipped.

In the spring of 1918 most divisions were sent overseas and camps were refilled with men again. They were formed into replacement regiments to be used in replacing casualties in the regular divisions overseas.

After arriving at camps the new recruits were given inoculations of typhoid fever and other diseases. After a few weeks of intensive drill the men were ready to be sent across.

Near the close of the summer men were drilled in a very short time. The greater percentage of physically unlit and illiterate came from the mountain districts of the south and alums of the large cities. Development battalions were formed to take care of these men.

Foreigners were taught sufficient English to enable them to understand orders.

For each six months service overseas, men are permitted to wear a gold stripe shaped like the letter "V" and placed on the left coat sleeve near the wrist. A gold star within the stripe represents a volunteer. A gold stripe on the right sleeve is a wound stripe. A blue stripe represents a fraction of six months overseas service.

A blue star within the stripe signifies a volunteer. A silver stripe signifies six months service in this country, while a silver star denotes a volunteer. A red stripe signifies an honorary discharged soldier.

Many of the returned troops wear various insignia on the left sleeve near the shoulder to denote the division of which they are a member. Not all insignia is officially recognized yet.

Some of the regulars have been shipped from camp to camp but have never been sent across. The 45th Regiment of Regulars is now in this camp. At different times men were taken from it and formed into replacement companies. The 45th is now partly enlisted and partly drafted men.

Demobilization activities have reduced the personnel of the camp to 11,404 men and officers. Of that number, 836 are officers and 10,568 are enlisted men. Of the number of enlisted men, 8,833 are white and 1,735 are colored.

Well, I must close for this time, with kind regards to yourself and to all inquiring friends.

ARCHIE HOLLAND,
2 M. Corps, Camp Gordon, Ga.
